Quality control during construction

for detached, semi-detached and terraced houses.

Owning a home is generally the most important investment people make in their lives. However, the long-term value of your home is critically influenced by construction quality. All the better, then, if defects are detected at an early stage and corrected before final inspection. Quality control of construction by TÜV SÜD includes regular quality control throughout all stages of construction, and thus protection of your investment from drawing-board to completion.

In the first step of our services, we explain the technical contents of the building specifications. During the construction stage, our experts support and assist you with any problems that may arise. On-site inspections of the construction site take place at the most significant stages of construction to verify that the completed work complies with the building specifications and the currently applicable standards and regulations. Our experts document every inspection and take photos of important findings. You obtain a report outlining all findings determined by our experts. After completion, we support you during final inspection and prepare a qualified inspection record.

As final inspection is legally significant, this step is especially important.

TÜV SÜD services:

- Quality control of basement damp-proofing: before back-filling of the basement workspace or, in the case of waterproof constructions, after pouring the concrete floor slab
- Quality control of carcass work, roof structure, window installation, rough-in plumbing and wiring for heating and electrical systems and sanitary installations: before service shafts are closed up and indoor walls plastered
- Quality control of vapour barriers, plasterwork, screed work, façade work: while finishing work is performed and roof insulation applied

Your benefits:

- ▶ Reduce defects right from the outset
- ▶ Gain certainty and save time and money
- ▶ Obtain an impartial and expert partner
